

Had all this wild game and all that to live on. But they revive it all by keeping these western pictures going. Pictures are nothing compared to their real live.

(I guess you can remember when there was plenty wild game here. Or was that before your time.)

Yes, before my time might have been years ago. See my dad was different from Indians. He had more interest in prospecting. That was his mission over here. And he just wasn't interested in it. And my mother course was Indian and I said when we were old enough to get out, they sent us away to school. (words not clear) over there by Oowalah.

(Yeah, I've heard of that.)

That's where my dad met my mother.

(Well)

Over at Chelsea.

(Well now that family was quite prominent here in the early days.)

Yes. And the Bards. They had a big place up the river. You know what, she's living there now. Her name was a Prather. Lizzie Prather. And she married Tom Bard. And Tom passed away about three, two years ago. No he didn't either about a year and a half ago. But he lived to be old. He lived to be about eighty-seven years old. And they had I can remember they had, I lived over there, they had big two story house and big fence around it. And they were very prosperous. And they of course the father and mother passed away. And that old house it practically fell down before they divided the estate. So this Tom Bard and Barbara Bard lived up there. But anyway Tom Bard was, took his money I guess, he was an Indian and had inherited some land and owned this place. There was just one room and a lean side, cook place, you know.
