He hauled lumber from Canadian, Texas, and built a house 24 x 24.

He did some farming, raising feed for his stock.

Mr. Pollock drove his cattle to Woodward, which was about seventy-five miles, and shipped them from there to Kansas City. He lived there until 1900, when he moved to Woodward County and located north of the town on the North Canadian River.

He moved two hundred and fifty cattle from Cheyenne to Woodward, overland, fording the South Canadian. When he reached the river, it was up, but he drove the cattle in Chyway, and every one of the cattle went under. They were all out of sight at once, but they all managed to get out. At one time he had one thousand head of cattle.

He lived on his Woodward County ranch until 1910, when he seld out and moved to Woodward where he still lives.

For a few years he dealt in real estate, but at present is just a retired rancher.

white man killed a Cheyenne Indian. The white population was about 150 people. The shooting occurred at noon and as soon as they heard about it all of the white people were afreid and all but three left town. The man who did the shooting was thrown in jail and Mr. Pollock was deputized to get in the jail and guard the prisoner. There were between 3000 or 4000 Indians camped on the south side of town and when they heard of the killing they came in "on the war path," but since everyone had left town there were no further killings.
